A pledge to tomorrow . . .

"Today's youth is tomorrow's hope."

Throughout the ages this phrase has inspired the hearts and minds of men and nations. Perhaps never in history has the present so fervently placed its hope for the future in today's youth.

The modern facilities, leadership, and guidance made available to today's youths prepare them for community leadership tomorrow.

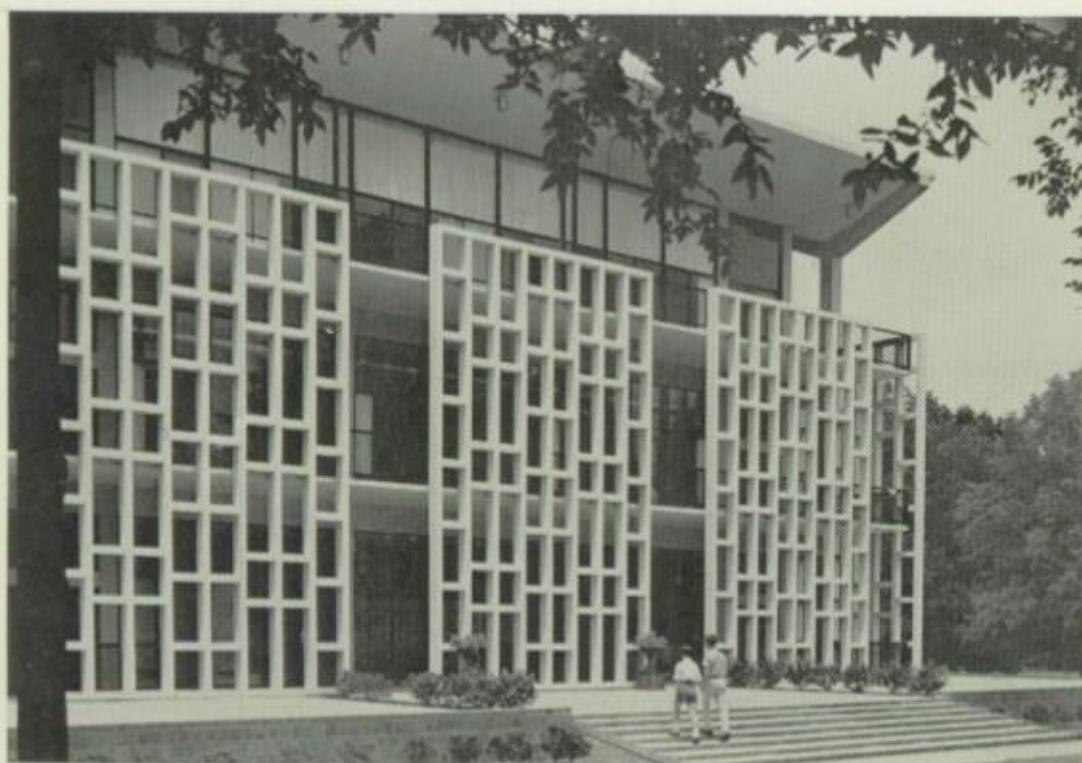

We, the youth of Kingsbury, recognizing the trust and hope centered in us, accept the challenge of today.

Meadwell welcomes you.

To the Kingsbury Class of '61, we offer congratulations and best wishes for your future. You are well aware, I am sure, that your theme, "Tomorrow's Leaders Today," has been the theme of your faculty through the years we have worked together with you. We hope we have educated you for leadership; for, as your teachers, we realize that a free society has a special stake in those whose decisions and actions shape the lives of many others. We will look to you and your endeavors to determine the future progress of Memphis, and the other "Memphises," which you will enrich after the completion of your formal education.

We take pride in students who will carry the intellectual spark into the world of tomorrow. We like to think we have had something to do with this.

Individually, I will miss you. Collectively, I rejoice with you on your commencement.

Whatever your ambition for the future is, the Guidance Department, composed of Mr. Wicker and Mrs. Scrivner, probably has a brochure describing the field. These teachers help students decide what vocation to choose, which college to attend, and how to apply for scholarships. Only after graduation, as the students begin to make their own way in the world, can the help of the counsellors be fully appreciated.

Mr. Wicker and Mrs. Scrivner talk to a worried parent as Bobbie and Alfred help with office duties.

Mrs. Scrivner helps many students plan their future, but Janie Helton seems to be flabbergasted at the closing college door.

The Guidance Department helps students decide which college to attend. Buildings such as the Panhellenic Building will be common sights to Kingsbury students who will attend Memphis State University.

Art classes provide an opportunity for creative expression. A potpourri of brushes, paints, canvas, and bulging portfolios form this melee of raw materials. Unusual football posters, decorations for school activities, and scenery for plays are some of the services this department renders to the school.

Fundamentals of art, proportion, color harmony, and balance are learned as students travel through all of art and crafts. A true appreciation of line and color in the world around us develops in our art classes. Our "young Rembrandt's of tomorrow" emerge with a sharpened sensitivity to the flowing scenes of life.

Click-click-clicking heard in certain rooms at Kingsbury and the strange symbols seen on the blackboards are not some kind of foreign code. They are the sounds and sights familiar to the future business and office workers of Memphis, Kingsbury's students. The clicking is a result of hard-working typing and office practice students, and the strange symbols are actually characters from a shorthand manual. A scraping sound of numerous pens moving over sheets of paper issues from rooms where bookkeeping classes are in progress. Commercial classes and the Commercial Club, where students become acquainted with office procedures, hum with the sound of a busy office.

Thespians

The Thespian Club's presentation of plays throughout the year offers opportunities for all speech students to learn and gain experience in all the phases of the dramatic arts.

Now's the time to talk of many things.

Many of our students are seen on WMCT.

As the conduct grades of some students testify, a very talkative group of people attends Kingsbury. Many of these "gabbers" have developed a real skill in oration as a result of the efforts of the Speech Department. These students are gaining experience for future public speaking, stage, and television appearances before Memphis audiences.

Outstanding students have been selected to represent Kingsbury at the National Speech Convention in Miami Beach, Florida. Resolved: "The United Nations should be significantly strengthened" is the topic of the debate.

Through the year, oratory, dramatic readings, and the outstanding production of Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice have given speech students other chances to "sound off."

and fashions fling.

No one has to inquire where the Home Economics Department is located. Everyone can just "follow his nose." Usually fragrant and spicy aromas of cookies, spaghetti, or some other delectables drift out from the home economics rooms.

From a maze of tape measures, patterns, and miles of thread, it seems perfectly possible that no finished product could emerge. However, the stylish dresses created by the sewing classes are always valuable additions to the wardrobes of the young homemakers.

Careful planning is necessary for all young ladies' wardrobes. Mam'selle and other shops are the scenes of true life experiences in shopping.

A day in woodshop

Image makers of the nation

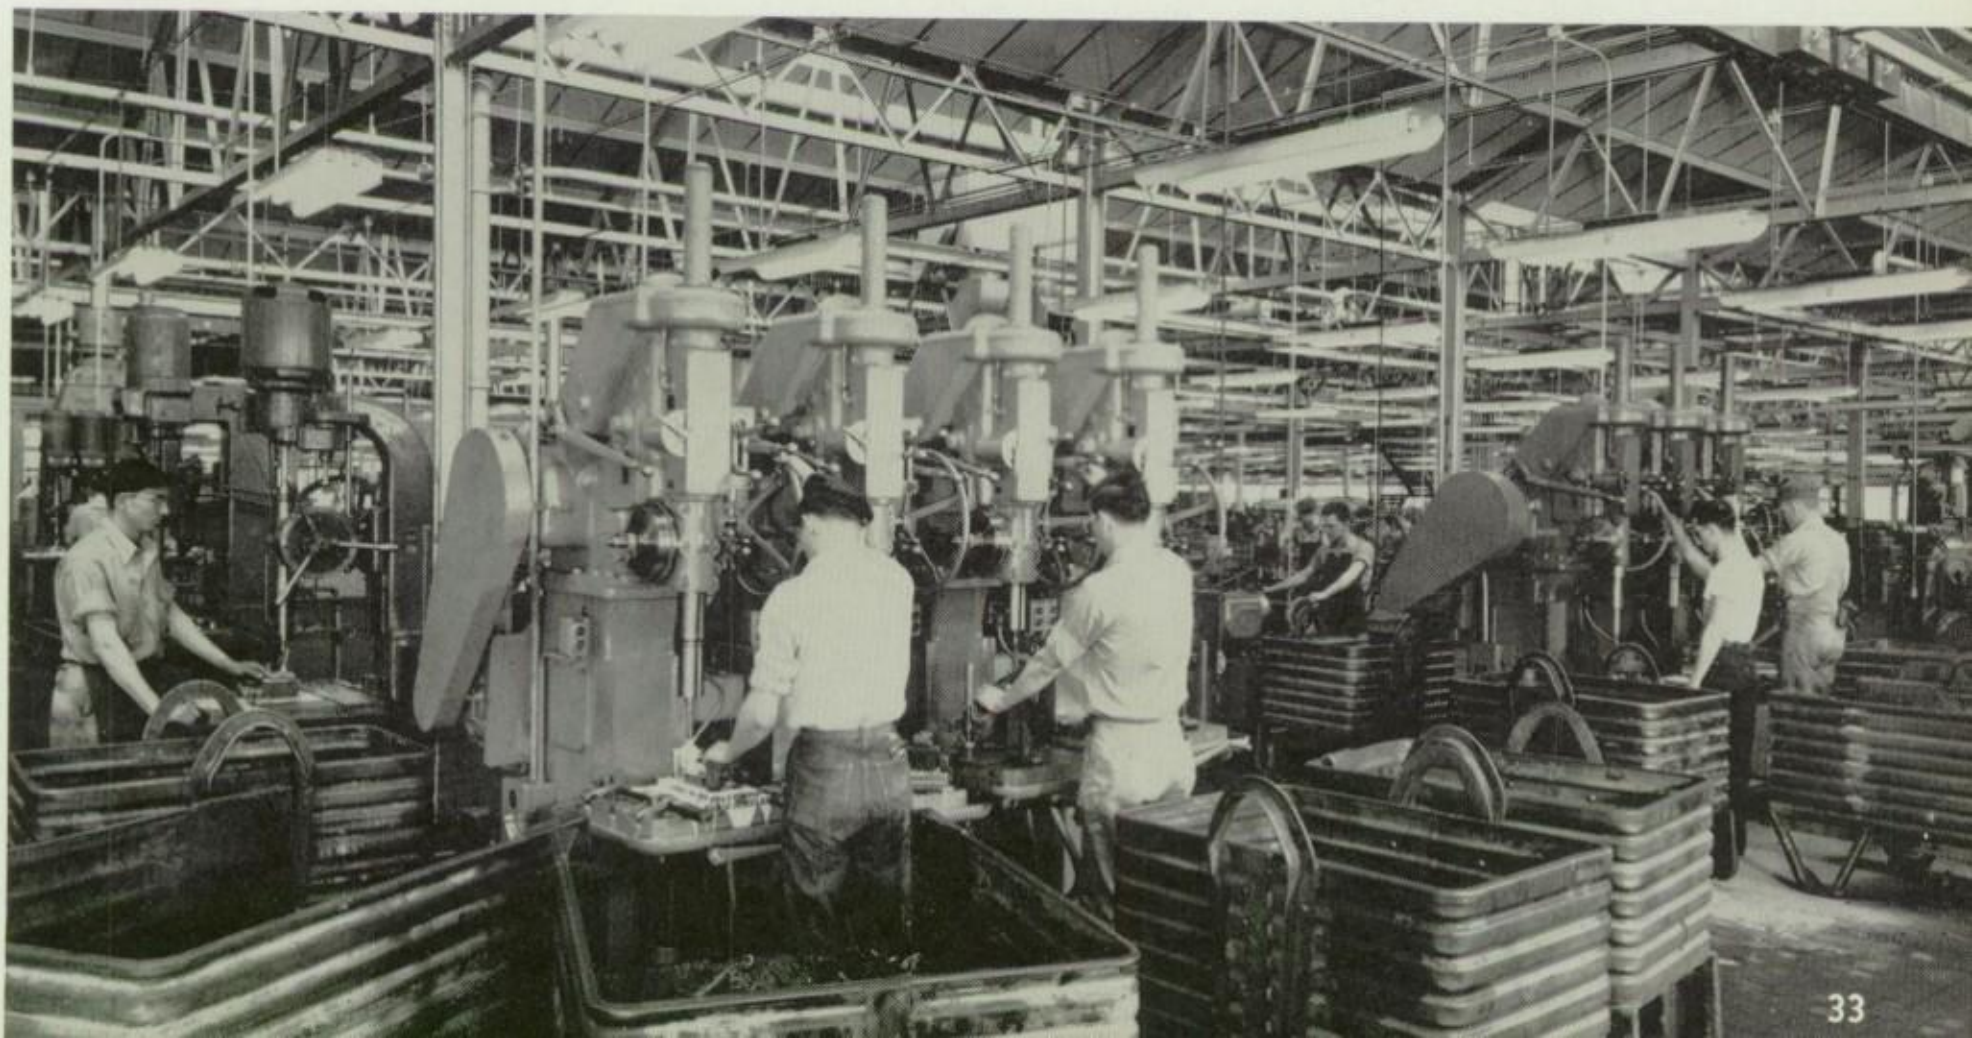

Into an air of activity, the sparks fly. Our well-equipped metal shop gives boys a sense of accomplishment.

By learning to use power saws, lathes, and compress drills, the boys in the wood shop bring home many objects d'art.

These creations are sometimes flat, sometimes round, and often shaped like bowling pins. The mere fact that these weird objects are usually lamps doesn't seem to phase our shop students.

There are many job opportunities in the field of industrial arts. For example, a student may work at a large factory such as International Harvester Company, Memphis Works.

Roman culture is still alive: Caesar's war strategy is analyzed by West Point students, the works of Cicero and Virgil are studied by scholars and historians, the structures built by the Romans over two thousand years ago still stand, in this area the Memphis Courthouse and many ante-bellum homes display columns and arches characteristic of this architecture.

Students learn case, structure, tense, and mood which will help them understand English because language is based on Latin. The use of new medical and scientific terms in our modern world makes Latin increasingly more important.

Mira! Es espanol. Students improve their diction by hearing stories read in Spanish.

"El burro sabe mas que tu" is an expression that describes the predicament of students just beginning a study of the Spanish language. By the end of a year of study, however, "poco a poco" they have acquired a basic knowledge of Spanish. Second year students conquer the subjunctive (Esperamos que si) and increase their Spanish vocabulary.

By listening to tapes in the Spanish lab, students can perfect their pronunciation and accent. Occasional movies with Spanish dialogue sponsored at local theaters by the Memphis Pan-American League present Spanish in action. Speaking a foreign language is truly an adventure in learning.

you up.

"Music and rhythm find their way into the secret places of the soul," said Plato. Kingsbury's active Music Department gives performances which prove this statement. Singing and playing at school activities are important functions of the Music Department. An excellent Christmas program was a result of the collaboration of the Vocal Music Department and the Band.

Memphis, "Home of the Blues," has a well-known musical history, and students of this city benefit from this culture. Our band marched in one of the colorful Cotton Carnival parades. Some band members belong to the Memphis Youth Concert Band. The Vocal Music Department participated in the West Tennessee Chorus, and the Junior High Music Department will take part in the Memphis Music festival this Spring.

The purpose of music is to give pleasure to the listener, and everyone who is familiar with Kingsbury's Music Department agrees that its music does just that.

and the challenge

Biology students learn by looking at life from many viewpoints.

Perhaps the students, who are performing dissections and trying to remember the chemical composition of air will never be Einsteins, but they're getting a basic scientific background which will make them better informed adults of the "Scientific Twentieth Century." Science is perhaps the one most emphasized field today. Memphis Junior Academy of Science members are gaining valuable experience and information about the various fields that one can enter. Memphis, one of the well-known medical centers of the United States, offers unlimited opportunities in scientific and medical research for all high school graduates who have "doctor dreams." Only some of Kingsbury's science students will choose careers in a scientific field in Memphis, but all will realize that H_2SO_4 is NOT a food.

Former "Boss" E. H. Crump played a large part in the development of a "better Memphis."

our tradition—

When an individual reaches twenty-one, he is not necessarily qualified to march to the polls and vote. Without well-informed voters, a democracy could not exist in its true form. Social studies students are instructed about the history of their country and its laws, about the meaning of the word, democracy, and about the relationship between the United States and other nations.

Two of Kingsbury's students received awards in this field. Janie Helton was selected by the faculty to receive the Daughters of the American Revolution Award. She has attended the state convention of the D.A.R.'s in Nashville. Shirley Holcomb represented Kingsbury in the Memphis "I Speak for Democracy Contest."

The citizenship fostered by these classes makes Memphis a strong barrier against Communism.

All school's a stage, and

He has his entrances and exits.

He plays the schoolboy with his satchel and shining morning face.

He creeps like a snail, unwillingly to class.

every student plays many parts.

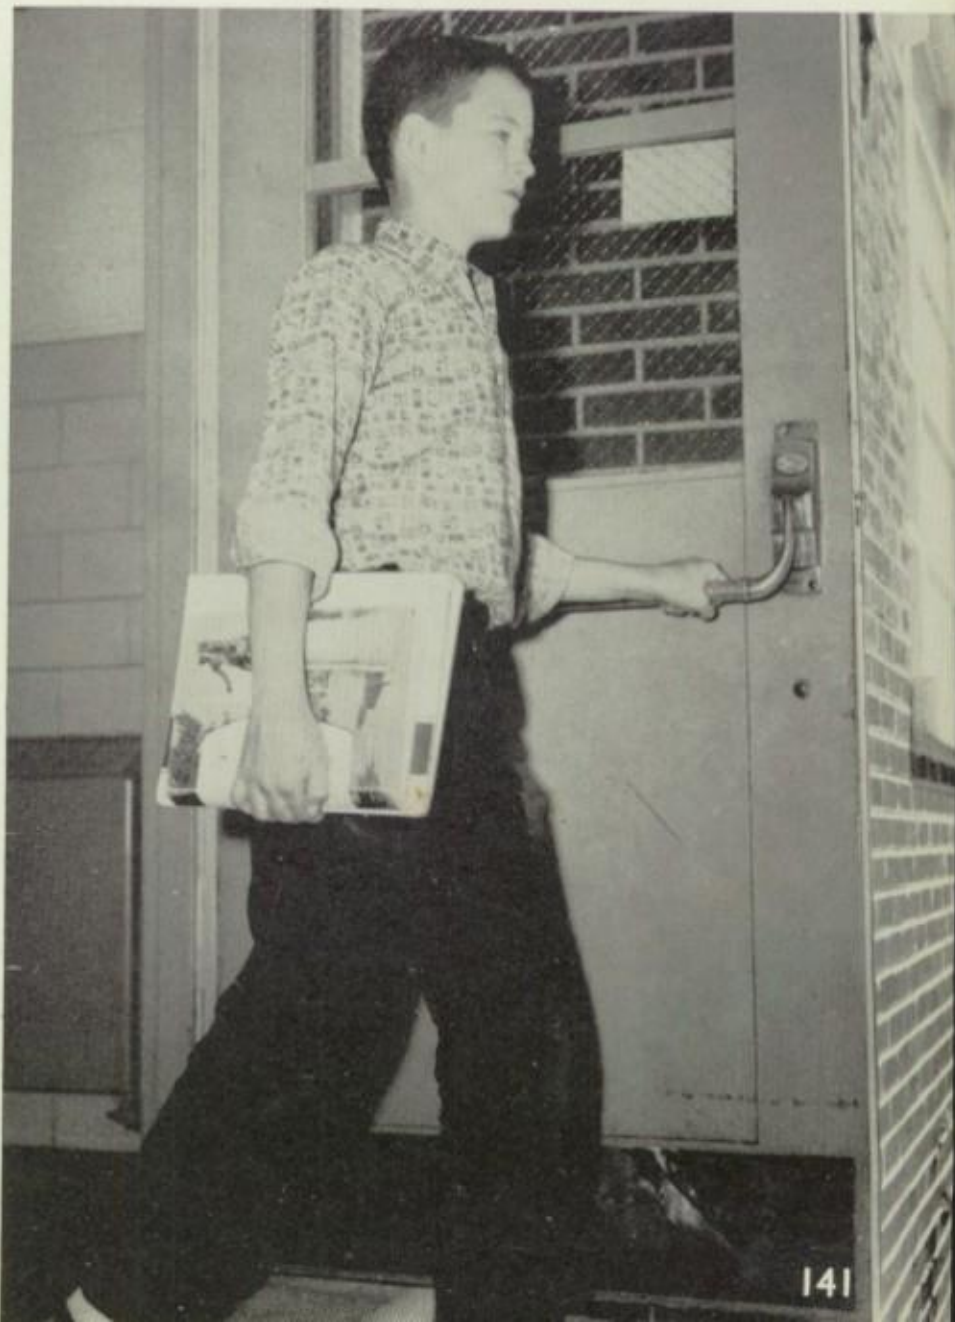

Then the justice, full of wisdom, ponders over his volumes.

And then the luncher, sighing like a furnace, is aroused by a thirst.

The last scene of all, the exit, which ends this strange eventful history.

Mr. and Miss "K" chat

Well-rounded describes the students chosen as Mr. and Miss Kingsbury. They were nominated and elected by the faculty and possess all the qualities included in the Hall of Fame: leadership, scholarship, appreciation of the beautiful, reverence toward the spiritual, creativeness, service, honesty, self-discipline, sportsmanship, courtesy, and cheerfulness. Admired and respected by fellow students and adults alike, the healthy balance in their lives is apparent in all they say and do.

Love of Scholarship

Those who love scholarship enjoy the experience of learning as an essential part of the experience of living. They also realize its beneficial results: learning to understand people and growing mentally, socially, and spiritually. Their study, a sincere search for knowledge, is not done for the sake of grades. Scholarship encompasses a fervor for all phases of learning.

Leadership

A leader is characterized by the quiet air of influence which he possesses. His words carry weight with others because they realize they can depend upon his decisions. He is a good supervisor without being dictatorial; he functions as a part of his group as well as its leader. Motivated by an interest in others, he leads not for the sake of leading, but from a genuine desire to be of service.

Students possessing the individual ideals and qualities were elected to the Hall of Fame by a majority vote of the members of the senior class after being nominated by the individual homerooms.

ALFRED TODD and FAY WINSTEAD

RONALD GARDNER and LILA GAY LEWIS

Cheerfulness

Cheerfulness is "balance of living," a sense of humor through which life falls into perspective. It is more than wearing a smile when one meets a friend; for it is possible to smile only from the outside. Real cheerfulness is an inner quality. The cheerful person is able to see life objectively and go about his duties happily. This radiant quality which brings gladness to others grows constantly brighter with use.

Service

Service is essentially unselfish. It recognizes the needs of others and puts giving above receiving. The standards and values which give meaning and purpose to human living are the forces which prompt unselfish service. Important jobs or impressive titles are not necessary in a life of usefulness. In fact, the service that is most valued is not given ostentatiously, but quietly, steadily, and inconspicuously. The opportunities of service are unlimited—they are as wide as the scope of human relationships.

Self Discipline

One often does what he wants to do instead of what he knows he should do. It is the self-disciplined person who performs to the best of his ability the tasks that should be done. The person who has acquired true self-discipline has built his values upon a firm foundation; his beliefs and ideals are strong. His strength of character manifests itself in his devotion to duty, his conduct in his social and personal life, and his complete reliability in all situations.

CHARLES MANDERSON and JUDY VERHINE

EARL HARRISON and VIRGINIA JONES

Honesty

Success in all fields of endeavor and self-respect are dependent upon personal honesty. This quality is the foundation stone of character upon which a person bases his code of honor. Honesty invites trust. It speaks with frankness, but with tact. It acknowledges personal errors and assumes responsibility for mistakes. It is impartial and courageous. It values truth over deception. In school one's standards of honesty and honor are in process of formation and are constantly being put to the test. Clear vision and straightforward sincerity are the basis for honesty. The ultimate strength of personality depends upon one's degree of faithfulness to the principles of basic personal integrity.

Appreciation of the Beautiful

An appreciation of the beauty and wisdom in music, the written word, and the fine arts, as well as in all life itself, is an indication of the quality of mind and spirit called "appreciation of the beautiful." The recognition of beauty in common experiences of everyday living adds beauty and a sense of fulfillment to the lives of those who possess this quality. The person who loves beautiful things and beautiful thoughts not only "takes in," but "gives out" as well. He finds the greatest satisfaction in sharing his love of beauty with others instead of hiding the treasure in his own heart.

JOHN SELLMANSBERGER and MARSHA SMITH

JAMES BROWN and CAROLYN BROOKINS

Courtesy

Courtesy is tact and attentiveness, graciousness of manner, and an expression of sincere interest in others. In its truest and finest meaning, courtesy is being polite because one likes and wants to be. The courteous person displays a natural charm that does not require sophistication. He will always find friends wherever he goes.

COURTESY

Carolyn Brookins

COURTESY

"A being breathing thoughtful breath."

Sportsmanship

Sportsmanship is a characteristic of a true gentleman or "gentlewoman." Justice, honor, and principle are codes by which the "good sport" lives. An important addition to these is consideration for others. In a classroom test of knowledge or on the playing field, the person who can accept honors graciously and lead the applause for another with equal vigor is admired by all as a "good sport."

JERRY WILHITE and JANIE HELTON

GARY GUY and BOBBIE HAMMERS

Creativeness

"Such stuff as dreams are made of" is a part of being creative. The dreams of a creative student are purposeful and productive. We connect this quality with the arts, and surely every true artist is creative, which means he has the talent, vision, and imagination to conceive a new idea and the inventiveness to make the idea an actuality.

TERRY BLACKWOOD and NITA LOWRIE

Reverence Toward the Spiritual

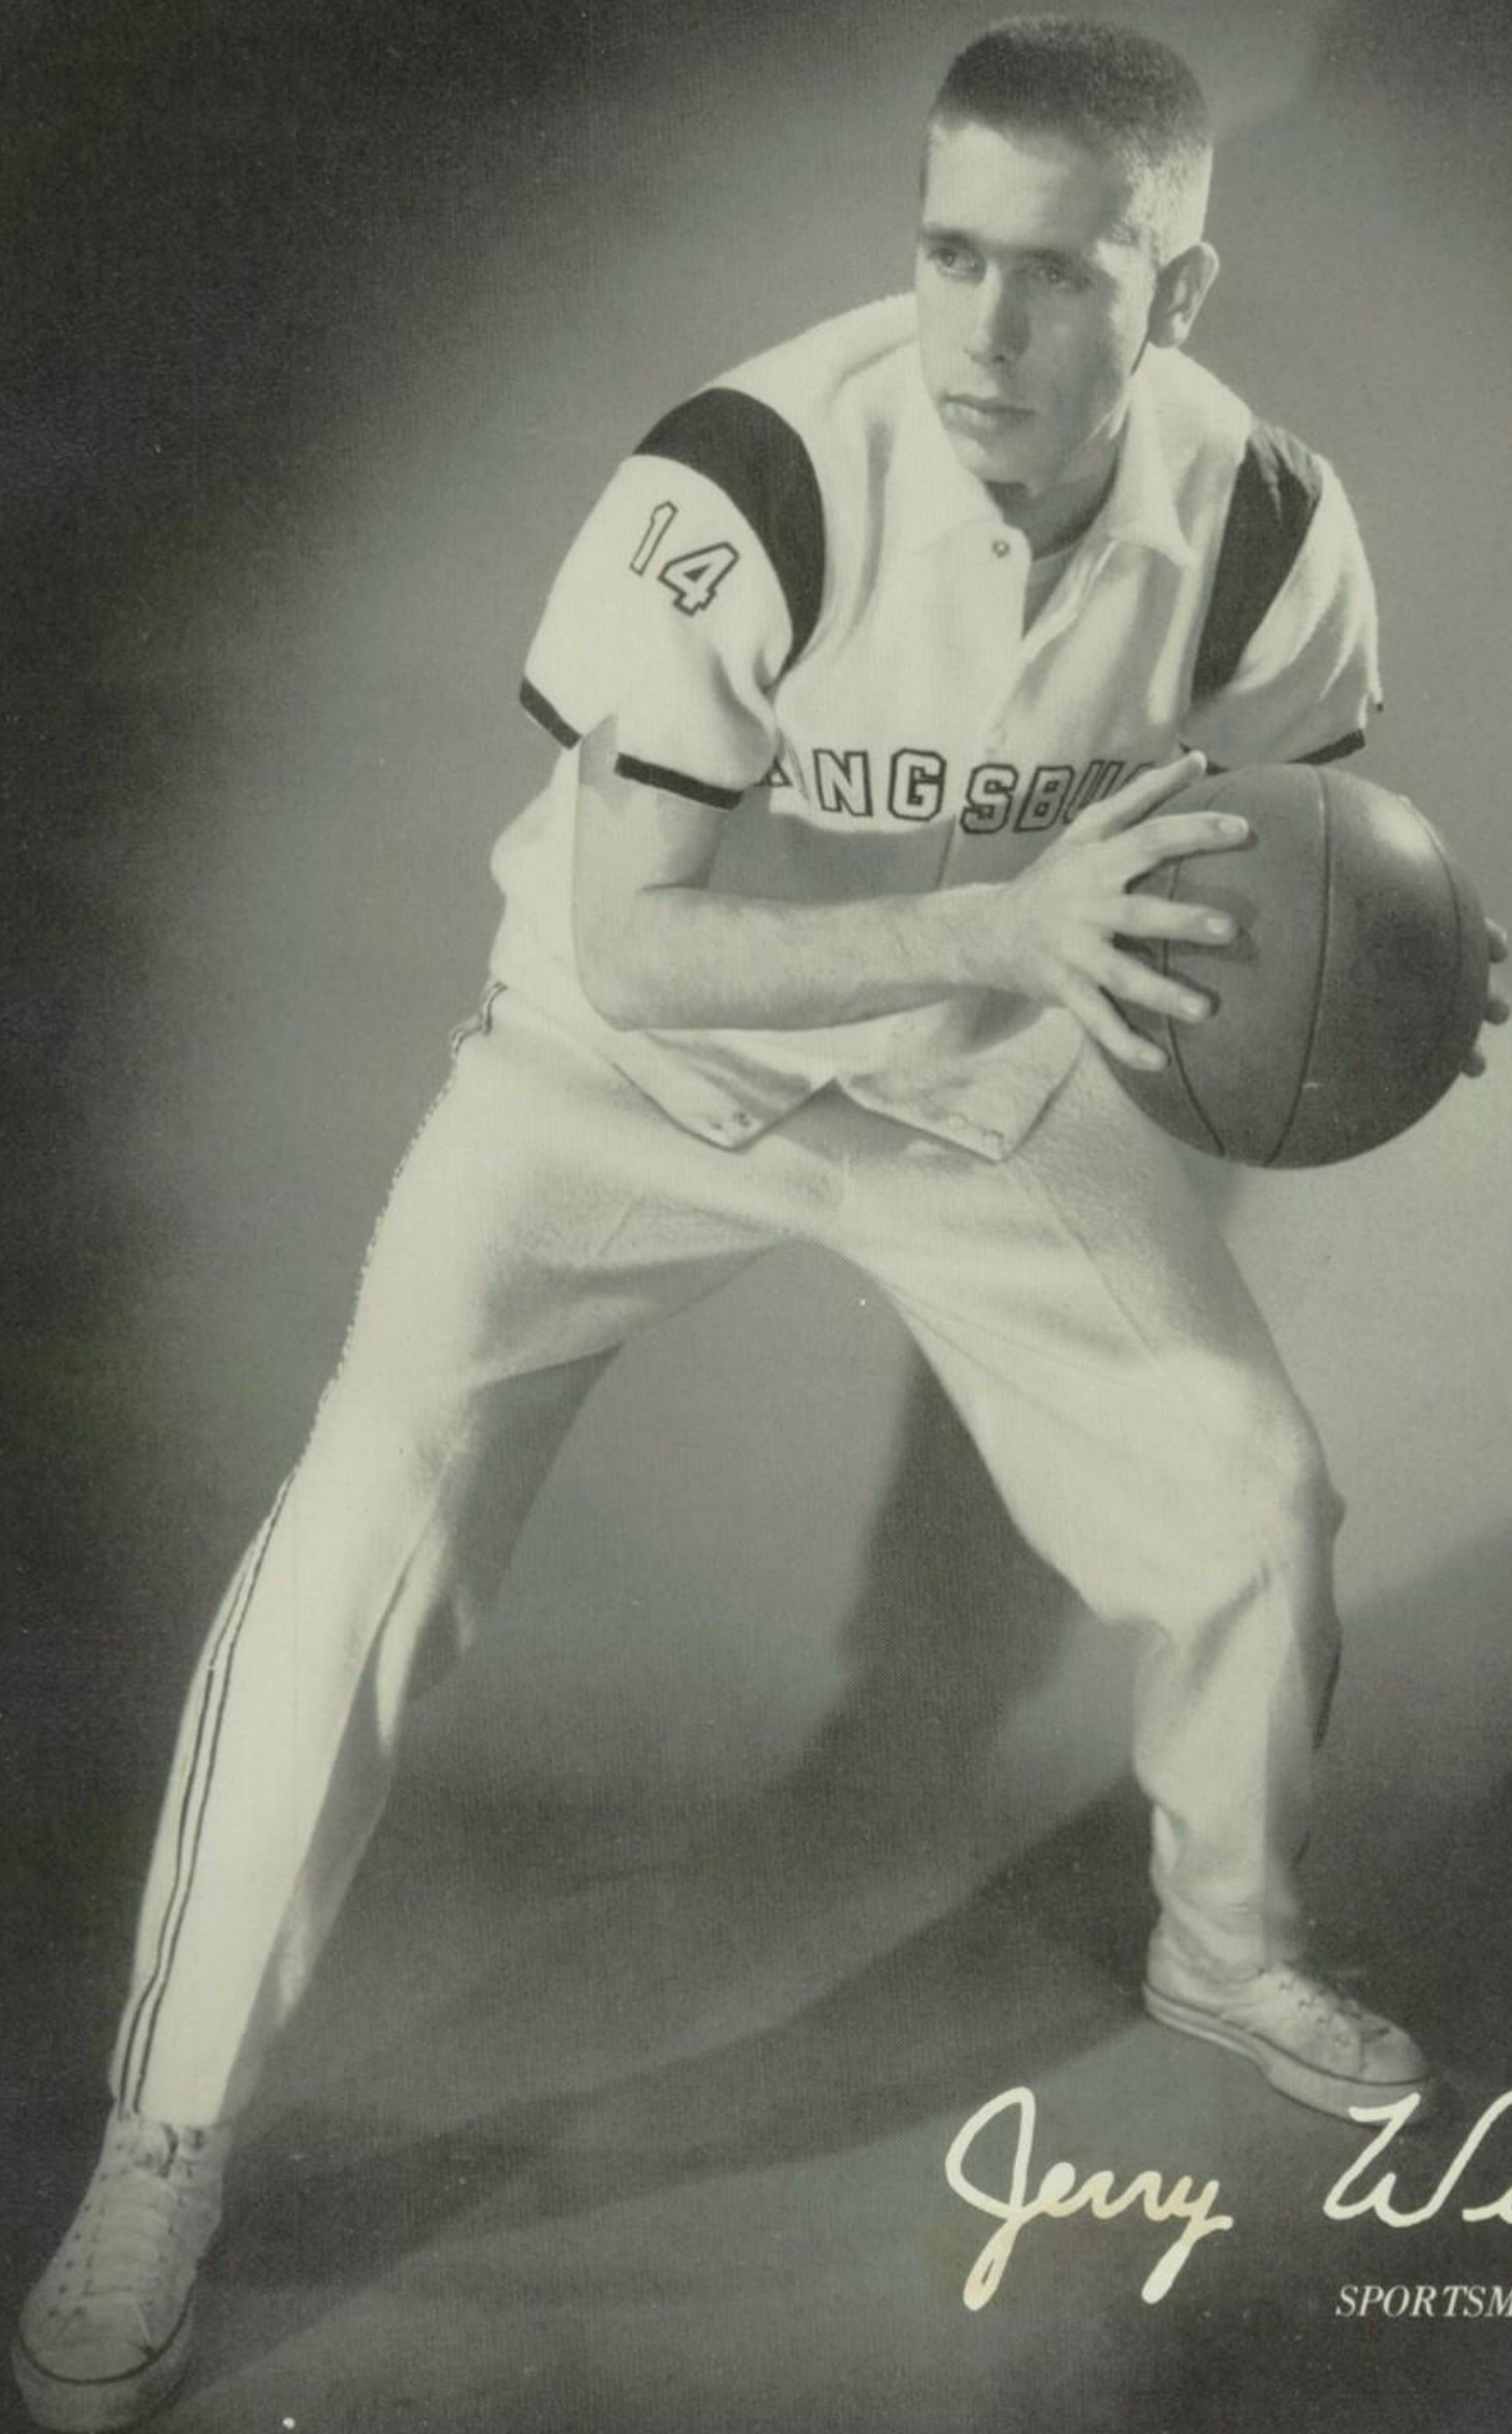

Reverence toward the spiritual, like all other ideals that really function in one's daily life, is an inner glow. Being reverent toward the spiritual is being aware of everything that is essentially fine and good. It means a search for standards of better living; it means the recognition of prayer as a means of better self-understanding. When a person has this quality, it is always in evidence. A life guided by reverence toward the spiritual expands and broadens because of the deep resources of strength that are always present.

Mr. Private Citizen

Consistent constructive influence in abiding by and respecting school laws and in his power of leadership is displayed by "Mr. Private Citizen." He is an outstanding force for good, maintaining the ideals of his school at all times in both attitude and action. He is involved in many activities of the school and is willing to assume any position offered him. Being a sound student, he is always willing to assume the responsibilities of "getting the work done."

"Get out there, boys, and give 'em . . ."

Lots of exercise and training, lots of hard work and co-operation are necessary to make a team. Good material is not enough. It takes long hours after school and much coaching to turn separate wills and minds into a smooth-working unit. Mental and physical agility is the result of our boys' toil.

In the gym our cheerleaders and band held pep meetings marked with clamor and excitement. We tried to send the boys off to each game with victory in their hearts.

Everyone, the youngest "Kingsburian," our parents, and our pedagogues enjoyed meeting friends in the stadium and cheering for the team. After the games sock dances and parties climaxed the evenings.

Pose of a pro.

Enthusiastic faculty increases school spirit.

On the nights when Kingsbury's traditionally fine team plays, the bleachers of our gym are packed, often to capacity. Through their close teamwork the boys rated among the best in the city. In the league the team's hard work and enthusiasm captured the fifth place.

Besides regular season play, Kingsbury's Falcons participated in the Whitehaven Tournament and the District Play-offs. One of the most exciting games was the Kingsbury-East game which was broadcast on radio. In a tight game, we defeated the first-place East with a score of 68 to 57.

After a good night the fans flock from the stands to congratulate the team for its playing. Basketball has proved to be one of the best links between Kingsbury and the city.

Working together

A BROADENING

Memphis—a city of many dimensions.

Parent-Teacher relationships are improved as students' progress is discussed at the PTA Open House.

Broadening, service to the community, wears many many faces, but true service must always be acknowledged.

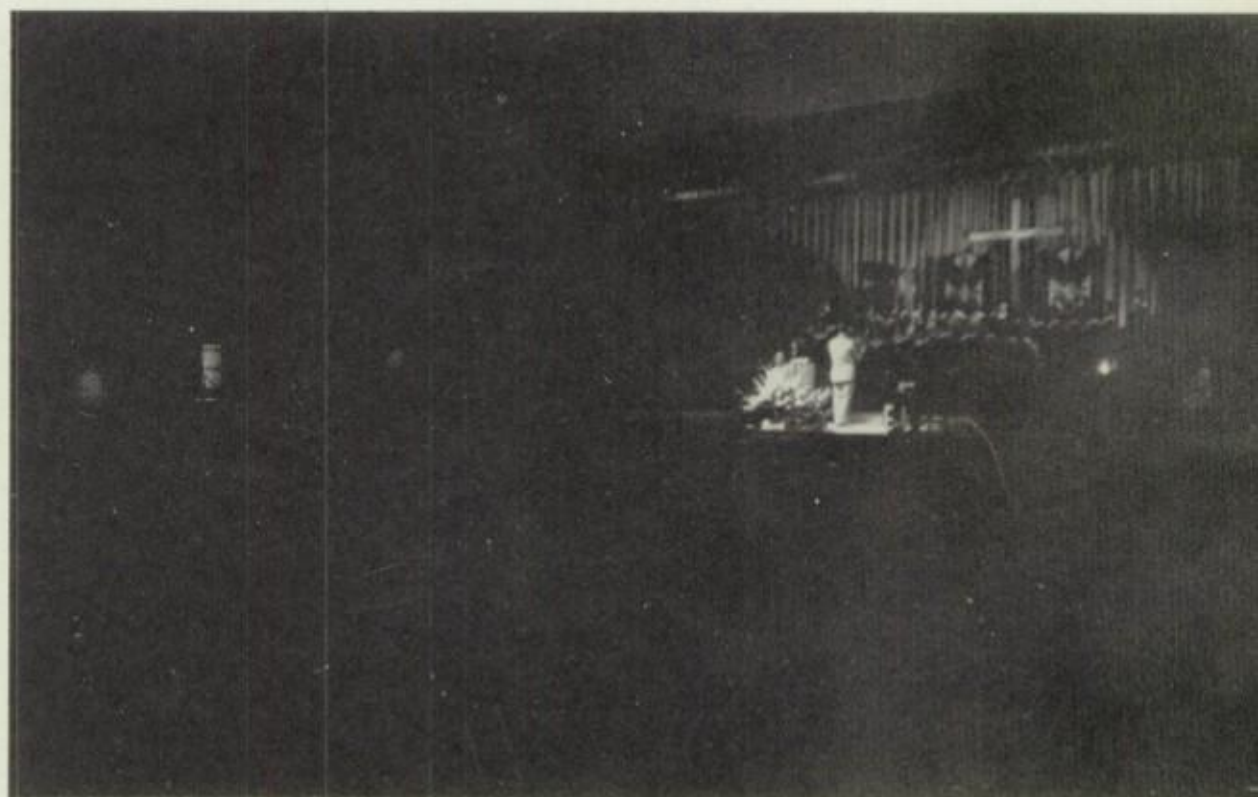

Broadening, in its diverse ways, incites an appreciation of all phases of life in both its active and contemplative veins. The many school activities broaden our awareness of our freedoms, of our heritage, and of each person's individual contributions to life.

Briefly, yet completely, it captures our community spirit, the love of our city, American way, and our fellowman.

Broadening is a giving, and the measure of life's splendor. It is the out-pouring and not the gathering in.

Scientific interests are encouraged and stressed during the Science Fair.

Dramatic lighting emphasizes the impressive Baccalaureate Service.

The cream of Kingsbury's debaters and public speakers leave for the Southern Speech Convention at Miami Beach.

Exploring our many vocational opportunities is the purpose of Career Week.

Key Club trains boys

Key Clubbers wade through Car Wash Day which will finance later service projects.

Three decades of dirt doesn't discourage the Key Club.

Publications

The Star staff were hand-picked for their excellence in creativity.

Editor Fay Winstead and Assistant David Smith proof the print.

The six copies of the STAR have kept the student body informed on what is happening in our school.

Creative students successfully composed editorials which appealed to a wide range of readers. News articles and feature columns made the student body aware of past and coming events. Factual sports coverage and detailed reporting provided a thorough account of all activities.

In gathering and assembling the facts, Mrs. McInnis, STAR adviser, guided the staff from headlines to deadlines.

Fay Winstead "talks shop" with television celebrity Art Linkletter, who addressed the local paper editors.

Endeavoring to record all the various activities of the year in the 1961 Talon was an enormous task. The staff was swamped by a deluge of pictures to be taken, copy to be written, layouts to design, and captions to write.

Late many evenings Mrs. Sullivan, adviser, and dedicated students struggled with pictures that wouldn't fit on the page and a typewriter that wouldn't compose.

The "book business" has made the staff realize second best just will not do. You must write, rewrite and rewrite to obtain first quality.

Virginia Jones, Bob McFarland, and Bobbie Sultan discuss the business affairs of the yearbook.

Editors Betty Weems and John Sellmansberger argue over layout and final copy.

Our busy staff studies layout and theme.

Quill and Scroll

Kingsbury's outstanding journalism students are selected for membership in the Quill and Scroll. Each student is carefully screened by teachers and principal for scholastic achievement, character, and "devotion to duty." Creative ability and self-discipline are necessary qualifications for membership.

All members are active workers on the school publications. These students strive to uphold the standards required to personal "freedom of the press."

Minstrel

The most salient project of the Junior-Senior class is its minstrel. With blacked faces and indubitable talent our students put on the show every year to raise money to pay for the prom and graduation.

The jokes were flying fast and furious as the interlocutor and endmen battled each other with punchlines.

One of the highlights of the show was the black-out sequence. With glowing hats, gloves and shoes, the chorus of over seventy sang and danced to, "Sing You Sinners."

Specials and novelty acts filled out the program. The show was a tremendous financial success—thanks to the hard work of all.

Senior picnic proves relaxing

Swim suits, hair rollers and sun tan lotion burden female seniors boarding the bus.

If one day of play can compensate for twelve years of hard work, our seniors do every year on their picnic. The busloads of exuberant classmates left early Tuesday after final exams. Water guns were prevalent among the future graduates. Everyone reached Chickasaw drenched and no one escaped the "battery at the back of the bus."

Boating, picnicking, and fraternizing were crammed into their fun-filled day. Late that afternoon, our senior class returned—blistered, boisterous, but with cherished memories.

Junior-Senior Prom

The 1961 Junior-Senior Prom was the best and most elaborate in our short history.

Sayonara (Good-by), the theme, caused a slightly sentimental atmosphere for the seniors, particularly when one of our graduates, Joan Barnard, sang the theme song from the picture.

Buddhas, pagodas, and cherry trees carried out effectively the thematic Japanese setting. Golden balloons carpeted the Rainbow Terrace's ceiling and the menu was written in flowing Japanese with an English translation.

Students and teachers all swept around the floor to the lilting strains of Massey Skipper and everyone looked and felt most elegant.

The lead-out nearly caused a few cases of pneumonia as four-fifths of the seniors and their dates waited their turn outside by the pool.

Everyone dined and danced until the wee hours and all agreed that this would be a night to remember.

The time has come for us to leave
 Our parting thoughts with you.
 With fond remembrances of our happy years,
 We wish to bid Adieu.

To Kingsbury High we leave our love
 For friends and faculty—
 And wish for you in the years ahead
 Happiness and prosperity.

Though we may roam far and wide
 To the earth's widest shore,
 We'll never forget our wonderful year
 As classmates of 12-4!
